About the book.

Question: Why are, on the one hand, so many people lonely and on the other hand so many people unhappy in their relationships?

Answer: Because the ability to love is shaped by our parents, sometimes even prevented, and often has to be learned once more so that we are able to live in a satisfying partnership. Many people project one parent on to their partner—leading to a lifelong unhappy relationship.

“We marry our parents.” With this provocative thesis the successful author of guidebooks Andreas Winter starts an exceptional information campaign. He examines the depth psychology patterns that are behind our choice of partner and explains why eroticism, sex, and the love of oneself are so important for all human beings—in a provocative, vivid manner and with scientific thoroughness.

Do you want to know why attractive, intelligent, prosperous people are unintentionally singles or why others have been hating his/her partner for years, but nevertheless cannot get away from him/her?

Be drawn into an exciting depth psychology analysis with the help of which every person can find the key to a satisfying partnership.
